Let's Start!

Pronunciation Spot: What stresses you out?

Learning Outcome

Exchange information about hypothetical situations in written and spoken interactions according to work and social contexts.

Ask your partner:

- What stresses you out?
- What do you do to relieve your stress?

Can Do Statements

- I can talk about relationships and character traits.
- I can say and use words like employee, engineer and Cantonese.
- I can use proper intonation in non-final thought groups.

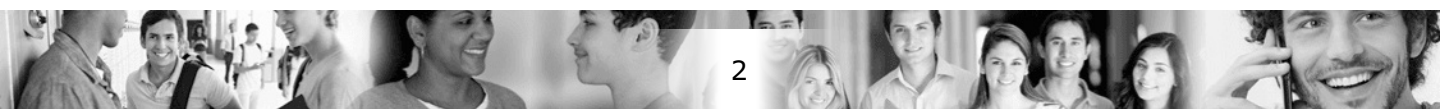

Let's Explore!

We're short-handed so we are going to be busy tonight.

* The word "short-handed" means not having enough staff in a work situation.

Instructions: Read the text aloud.

- Vanessa: I talked to my supplier yesterday when he came into the restaurant. He guaranteed the shipment would be here at 4:00 pm. When does the engineering group arrive?
- Marcel: 8:00 p.m.
- Vanessa: What time is it now?
- Marcel: It is 7:45.
- Vanessa: Have you seen Rachel?
- Marcel: I just called her on the phone. She said she's sick and can't come in.
- Vanessa: Really! Where are Michael and Alexander?
- Marcel: Rachel told me they were in a car accident.
- Vanessa: WHAT? Why didn't they call me?
- Marcel: I guess they were preoccupied.
- Vanessa: Are they ok?
- Marcel: They are a little banged up, but ok. They are going to stay at home though as a precaution. Here comes the engineering group!
- Vanessa: GREAT! We're short-handed three employees. I'll take care of them, I need you to oversee the bar.
- Vanessa: Welcome to Bistro 88. Are you with the Asian engineer committee?
- Mr. Wu: Yes, we are.
- Vanessa: And how many in your party?
- Mr. Wu: Twenty-two. Two are late.
- Vanessa: Come with me everyone.
- Vanessa: Hello, everyone. My name is Vanessa and I will be serving you this evening. So where is everybody from?
- Mr. Wu: We are from all over Asia. We have Japanese, Chinese, Vietnamese, Korean and Cantonese from Hong Kong.
- Vanessa: Well, welcome to Boston. Are all of you engineers?
- Mr. Wu: No, we have two sightseers and I am a volunteer helping out. Could we start with some of your famous Bistro wine? I'll order for everybody.
- Vanessa: Absolutely! Would you like white or red?
- Mr. Wu: Three bottles of white and three of red.
- Vanessa: Would you like Merlot or Sauvignon?
- Mr. Wu: I'd like Sauvignon, please.
- Vanessa: Would you like cheese and crackers?
- Mr. Wu: Yes, please.
- Vanessa: Great! I'll be right back.
- Marcel: Here is the supplier.
- Vanessa: Tell your boss he's fired!

Let's Practice!

Learning Points

Stress with Suffixes: Three Syllable on the Suffix

You stress words differently according to their suffix patterns. The syllable stressed in the word will depend on the suffix pattern that the word follows.

Words ending in -ee, -eer, and -ese are stressed on the last syllable.

Read the following words and pay attention to proper emphasis and suffix stress:

guarantee

employee

oversee

engineer

sightseer

volunteer

Japanese

Cantonese

Vietnamese

Examples:

- He guaranteed the shipment would be here at 4:00 pm.
- We're short-handed three employees.
- Are you with the Asian engineer committee?
- I need you to oversee the bar.
- We have Japanese, Chinese, Vietnamese, Korean and Cantonese from Hong Kong.
- Would you like cheese and crackers?
- We have two sightseers and I am a volunteer.

Learning Points

Intonation in Non-Final Thought Groups

A thought group refers to a coherent unit of speech that forms a whole. You normally separate a long sentence into several thought groups, held together by thematic content or by natural pauses in the sentence.

Non-final thought groups represent all the thought groups that you say before the last thought group of a sentence. The final thought group is the thought group that ends a sentence.

You stress non-final thought groups differently from final thought groups.

You normally stress non-final thought groups with a normal-rising-normal pattern. You stress final thought groups with a normal-rising-falling pattern.

Example:

My name is Vanessa, and I will be serving you this evening.

→ → → → ↗ ↘ → → → ↗ ↘ → → → ↗ ↘ ↘
 My name is Vanessa / and I will be serving you / this evening.

Examples:

- I'll take care of them, / I need you to oversee the bar.
- I just called her on the phone. She said she's sick / and can't come in.
- Rachel told me / they were in a car accident.
- Would you like Merlot / or Sauvignon?
- Would you like white / or red?
