Let's Start!

Shh! It's a secret!

Learning Outcome

Exchange information about hypothetical situations in written and spoken interactions according to work and social contexts.

Ask your partner:

- Are you good at keeping secrets? Why or why not?
- What secret have you kept the most? Would you reveal it? Why? Why not?

Can Do Statements

- I can talk about relationships and character traits, and use colloquial expressions.
- I can write about impossible, unlikely or hypothetical situations.
- I can link an event in the present or future to another using words like while, when, as, every time, once, before, and until.

Let's Explore!

She quickly scribbled her phone number on a napkin and gave it to me.

* "To scribble" means to write or draw something in a messy way and in a hurry.

Instructions: Read the text aloud.

- Vanessa: Another good session. Do you have some time to chat?
Amy: We can chat for a while until my next client arrives. She goes to the coffee shop before she comes in, so we have time. She will come in for our session after she drinks her latte. It's her system.
- Vanessa: I'm going straight to the restaurant after I leave. That's my system.
Amy: Well. You look light as a feather. Anything new?
Vanessa: Peter took me to see the Foo Fighters.
Amy: Really? Good time?
Vanessa: It was something else. Originally, I didn't want to do anything for the entire day. I just wanted to stay home and veg, but if I hadn't gone, I would feel terrible today, for sure. If I hadn't gone, I would feel really depressed.
- Amy: Absolutely. Do you feel depressed now?
Vanessa: No! I feel great. If I hadn't gone, I wouldn't have met Dave Grohl in person. I hadn't really met anyone famous before.
- Amy: Backstage passes. Very cool!
Vanessa: Finally, if I hadn't gone, I wouldn't know you arranged the whole thing.
Amy: How did you know? Did Peter tell you?
Vanessa: Nope. I saw your name scribbled on the envelope.
Amy: Wha ... I told him ...
Vanessa: You'll get used to it.
Amy: If I had planned it, you would still be guessing if I arranged it or not.
Vanessa: It was a lovely gesture. Peter and I had a good talk. We had a heart to heart. We cried on each others shoulders. It was good. You must have friends in high places?
- Amy: I have a few friendly connections.
Vanessa: So? How long have you and Peter been dating?
Amy: A couple of weeks now. We had dated once before, and Peter and I ran into each other again when you and I were talking about life coaching that night at the bistro.
- Vanessa: I would have never known that if you hadn't told me just now.
Amy: Somehow I doubt that. If you hadn't become a bar manager, you would be a detective. Anyway, we are taking it slow while we get to know each other.
Vanessa: That's my Peter. Always taking his time.

The Unreal Past: Past Results of a Present Condition

You can talk about two different times in a mixed conditional sentence. In this type of mixed conditional, you can talk about a present condition with a result in the past.

In this conditional, you are talking about a past time in the main clause and something that always happens or is happening now in the if-clause.

Examples:

If I didn't have children, I would have saved more money.

The reality is that I have children (present condition), and I didn't save more money (past result before now).

I would have traveled more often if I had more money.

The reality is that I didn't travel often (past result before now), and I don't have money (present condition).

Grammar Structure:

If + simple past , would have + past participle

would have + past participle...if + simple past

Remember that you are talking about unreal situations, so the information in this conditional is opposite to the true situation.

Pronunciation Note: In speaking, would have is usually joined and sounds more like /wɒldʊv/.

Examples:

- If I hadn't gone, I would feel terrible today, for sure.
- If I hadn't gone, I would feel really depressed.
- Finally, if I hadn't gone, I wouldn't know you arranged the whole thing.
- If I had planned it, you would still be guessing if I arranged it or not.
- Somehow I doubt that. If you hadn't become a bar manager, you would be a detective.

Time Clauses: Talking about the Present and Future

You can talk about things in the present and future by using time clauses in your sentences.

Present	Future
Both clauses use the Present Simple tense. This is similar to the zero conditional and talks about situations that are generally true. Example: When it is sunny, I go to the beach. I stay home when I feel sick. ★★ Don't forget to use commas if the time clause comes before the main clause.	You can talk about things in the future using time clauses as well; however, the verb tense in the time clause is in the present. This is sometimes confusing, since many students want to use a future verb form in the time clause. You can use when, after, before, as soon as. When you talk about specific events where the event in the main clause depends on the completion of the action in the time clause, then use the present perfect in the time clause. Example: As soon as you've finished your dessert, we'll get the bill and leave. (The time clause action "finishing dessert" has to be finished in order for the main clause event "getting the bill and leaving" to happen.) For more general situations, you can use the present simple in both clauses. Example: After having a meal, people usually have dessert.

Examples:

- We can chat for a while until my next client arrives.
- She goes to the coffee shop before she comes in, so we have time.
- She will come in for our session after she drinks her latte.
- I'm going straight to the restaurant after I leave. That's my system.
- Peter and I ran into each other again when you and I were talking about life coaching.
